Dear Dr. Koerner:

I would be pleased to contribute a short article to your journal. Your March 15, 1978 deadline should pose no problems, however, I have asked my Special Assistant, [redacted] to contact you after the first of the year to confirm the date by which you can expect a draft.

I appreciate your asking me to write for your journal and I look forward to the project.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Admiral Turner:

A current concern of many people is what the nation's schools are teaching, what their goals are, and how they are serving the country's needs.

As editor of a journal read by 35,000 school principals and thousands of others involved in the administration of schools, I would like to address this concern directly--by publishing several articles by leaders such as yourself, reflecting what the writers believe the schools should be teaching and the directions they should be taking.

A contribution by you to this special issue of our monthly journal would certainly enhance its significance. May I count on your writing such a piece?

If so, the article should be about seven typewritten, doublespaced pages. The deadline I am working on is March 15, 1978.

I look forward to hearing from you at your earliest convenience.

Cordially,
